

AO: Office of Probation and Pretrial Services

Creating Safer Communities Through Employment

Course Description: Designed primarily for: Judges, senior court executives, and probation and pretrial chiefs.

Designed primarily for: Judges, senior court executives, and probation and pretrial chiefs.

Every year, over half a million offenders return to the community after completing their prison terms. But many of them find that transition difficult. Is there anything that can be done to help? This program highlights the success several probation and pretrial services offices, in both urban and rural jurisdictions, have experienced by focusing on finding meaningful employment for ex-offenders. Statistics show that employed ex-offenders are less likely to re-offend, and the benefits are numerous. The ex-offender benefits from stability, a good income, and the feeling of belonging to society, and society benefits from increased productivity—and becomes safer as a result. Learn from judges and federal probation and pretrial services officers who have implemented the employment plans in their communities, and hear the compelling testimonies and life stories of the ex-offenders themselves

Target Audience: Court Unit Executives, Article III Judges, Bankruptcy Judges, Magistrate Judges, Probation & Pretrial Services Officers

Prerequisites: Register by calling the United States District Clerk's Office
